Hymn #8 gave me a great deal of pleasure. The rest of the service annoyed me. I sat with the Yepsom and that was nice. Barbara is very upset that BWP's marriage & TMS is off. Pullis wants me to get the Compac Committee in gear again & I don't want to. There is no support in the Church for it and I feel like a fool trying to sell ice boxes to the eskimos." at a special meeting of the BBC Administrative Board, which was held after church, Rev. Pullis announced that the Church organist, Jackie Schatt, was resigning at the end of the month. She does not have time enough to be organist - <sup>she is also a student</sup> we accepted her resignation "with regret."

09-09-1984 - p. 2

Curiously, I am tonight in a melancholy mood such as I have not been in for weeks, months, possibly longer. At about 7 P.M. I decided to lie down and read the final pages of Vita Sackville-West's "The Edwardians," and I did so. When I had finished, I allowed myself to "drift off" and enjoyed/ luxuriated in a 20-minute nap. When I woke up, I was in a very melancholy state of mind. It was beginning to get dark. I thought of Mrs. Russell and her fondness for twilight and remembered H.K.P.'s saying "even moon <sup>DELR</sup> got to feeling lonely or blue it was always at twilight. She would look out the window at the setting sun and recite the poem which begins 'Slowly England's sun was setting.'"

My state of being is not one of lonely - men or blue - ness. Rather, it is one of end - men / finality. I'm sure my melancholy state was induced by the final pages of Vita Sackville-West's wonderful novel: the final flowering of the Edwardian word, the evocation of the over-and-done Victorian word. One can not help but see one's self in a sequential chain. // Quiet. Very quiet. Now that "the summer is over," as many people are now saying (even though two of the most beautiful months of the year are now ours to enjoy), the number of cars <sup>that pass by here</sup> particularly on Sunday and in the evening, has diminished considerably, which is just wonderful from my point of view. The day has been one of great peace, and I have enjoyed myself very much. I returned from church and decided to indulge in some spaghetti with white clam sauce, accompanied by some of WSP's tomatoes and some Kirby cucumbers over which I poured olive oil, basil and some fresh garlic cut into thin slices. Drank some
